OUR CONFERENCE ROOMS:

The Shoebill:

The shoe-billed stork derives its name from its massive shoe shaped bill. The population is estimated at between 5,000 and 8,000 individuals, the majority of which live in swamps in Sudan, Uganda, eastern Democratic Republic of the Congo, and Zambia. There is also a viable population in the Malagarasi wetlands in Tanzania. It is threatened by habitat loss.

The Fox Weaver:

The Fox's weaver (Ploceus spekeoides) is a species of bird in the Ploceidae family. It is endemic to Uganda. Its natural habitats are moist savanna, subtropical or tropical seasonally wet or flooded lowland grassland, and swamps. It is threatened by habitat loss.

The Ituri Batis:

The Ituri batis is a very small bird with a broad black breast and white underbelly. The Ituri batis occurs in the Eastern Congo basin in Ituri and Itombwe in the North Eastern Democratic Republic of Congo, where it is uncommon. It can be found in the Budongo forest in Western Uganda.

The Nkulengu Rail:

The Nkulengu Rail is a member of the Rallidae family and inhabits dense lowland primary and secondary rainforest where rank vegetation lines streams, rivers, and swamps or marshy areas. The diet of this species consists of snails, millipedes, insects (e.g. ants and beetles), small amphibians (e.g. frogs) and hard seeds. It is listed as decreasing in population.

The Karamoja Apalis:

The Karamoja Apalis is found in Tanzania, Uganda and Kenya. Its natural habitat is subtropical or tropical moist shrubland with a particular preference for stands of whistling thorn. It is threatened by habitat loss.
